Dear Mr Steinberger:

I am writing to express my gratitude for all the hard work you have put into my case.

After two years of having a somewhat negotiated visitation schedule with my kids, I found myself confronted with a conflict where my ex-wife was trying to eliminate even the minimal visitation I had. I realized that I needed serious help from one of the best in the field, due to the unique situation I was in.

After our initial session, I felt that I found the proper person who will be able to guide me through this insurmountable challenge I found myself in.

Going through all my options, I made the conscious decision, to fight for full custody, knowing well, that that route, would be very costly, very challenging, and become a "double or nothing" situation.

I now realize that I didn't do enough on my part and allowed myself to be clumsy for my part of the situation.

That, and the fact that some psychologists still strongly believe that kids' religion should be a deciding factor in custody arrangements, has caused me to lose my battle.

I still believe though, that I've gained a lot during the time I was working with you.

I became a better litigant, I became a better person, and I still have strong hope that the work and knowledge you gave me, will be fruitful for me in deciding other determinations in my continuous battle and will also be of great help to other friends of mine who are in the same situation.

I realize that in hindsight I should have done things differently, but what I did will allow me to sleep at night knowing that I fought very hard for what was right.

I'm truly grateful for allowing me the opportunity to be able to hire you, I value greatly the hard work and insight you gave me.

I would tell people, "if you want an attorney who is competent, knows what he's doing, and will outsmart the opposing counsel, you should hire Chaim Steitberger!"

Because what surprised me the most was that when it came to the law and knowledge of the law, you were always one step ahead of the opposing counsel.

With Gratitude
